A BRIEF HISTORY OF RURAL MUTUAL SELF-HELP HOUSING IN THE UNITED STATES

HAC | Rural Research Report

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) has been funding mutual self-help housing since the early 1960s. The self-help housing model uses homeowner contributed labor to reduce the costs of their homes. This report provides a historical overview of the USDA program, including a brief narrative summary and detailed tables, updated through Fiscal Year 2013.

This paper was initially prepared by Art Collings and edited by Leslie R. Strauss of the Housing Assistance Council (HAC). The current edition of the report was updated by Michael Feinberg and Keith Wiley, also of the Housing Assistance Council. HAC, founded in 1971, is a nonprofit corporation that supports the development of rural low- and moderate-income housing nationwide. HAC provides technical housing services, seed money loans, housing program and policy assistance, research and demonstration projects, and training and information services. HAC is an equal opportunity lender.

A NOTE ABOUT THIS REPORT AND ITS INITIAL AUTHOR, ART COLLINGS

Art Collings first produced this HAC report in 1996. A long-time USDA and HAC employee, Art was often referred to as the "conscience" of the rural housing movement. Anyone who encountered Art knew that he worked tirelessly to improve USDA's housing programs, as well as make them available and accessible to as many low-income rural Americans as possible. Below are excerpts from Art's "Author Notes" in his final update of the report in 2004, the year he retired.

History is important. We need to know the past in order to both understand the present and prepare for the future. This outline is sketchy and hardly a comprehensive history of the program. Instead it briefly identifies significant happenings that contributed to mutual self-help housing as we know it today. Some people are identified by name. Others who contributed are not. There was no conscious effort to overlook anyone. And it is impossible to identify all in an outline of this kind.

Some of the Farmers Home Administration archives relevant for this study have been stored, even inaccessible, so a few dates may be slightly off. I have checked with persons associated with the early program in an effort to be as accurate as possible. I am particularly indebted to Bill French of the Rural Community Assistance Corporation, who provided additions and corrections to an earlier draft, and to Peter Carey of Self-Help Enterprises, who combed old issues of the RHA Reporter to ferret out additional information, particularly for pre-1966 loans. Fortunately, the records containing numbers for the Section 523 grant program were all readily available for inclusion in this paper.

INTRODUCTION

This report outlines the evolution of organized self-help housing, specifically mutual self-help housing utilizing financing from the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) Rural Housing Service (RHS), formerly the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA). It is also a record of USDA assistance.

Self-help housing means homes built wholly or in part by their purchasers. In the mutual self-help model, families work together and collectively build each other's homes. Self-help, sometimes called sweat equity, can make purchasing a home affordable for a family with a very low income, because the purchaser's labor reduces the cost of the house.

Organized mutual self-help housing with a permanent source of mortgage financing for participants (the Section 502 direct loan program) is a product of Quaker origin, rooted in the Nova Scotia experience of St. Francis Xavier University. Those who followed have done just that -- followed. The principles developed in the first FmHA-financed self-help project in Goshen, California remain the basis for the RHS self-help program as it is known today. In this Quaker model, mutual self-help housing is accomplished through training and supervision provided by a sponsoring organization. The Rural Housing Service's program of today is more structured and includes the following elements:

- participating families;
- administrative grants for sponsors;
- four regional contractors that provide technical assistance and oversight to grantees; and
- financing and monitoring by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Rural Development/Rural Housing Service staff.

Participating families usually receive subsidized long-term (called "permanent") mortgage loans through the RHS Section 502 program. (This program also funds mortgages for low- and moderate-income families not using the self-help model.)

Map 1. and Figure1. of this report summarizes the total cumulative Section 502 loan obligations to self-help participants. Figure 2. shows this information for the period FY 2000 through FY 2013.

Table1. provides a year-by-year summary of Section 502 loans made to self-help participants. Table 2. shows loans for each state in each fiscal year including cumulative figures.

RHS also provides grants to cover sponsoring organizations' administrative costs through the Section 523 program. Table 3. summarizes Section 523 grants and contracts, by year. Table 4. indicates grants for each state in each fiscal year. Table 5. is a list of current (February 2014) self-help technical assistance providers.

A HISTORICAL OUTLINE OF RURAL MUTUAL SELF-HELP HOUSING

Human beings have long practiced collective and community home and barn raisings. Modern organized self-help housing in North America began in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania in 1933, where the Pennsylvania Relief Board operated a program for unemployed coal miners. By 1940, 250 units had been completed.

In 1937 the American Friends Service Committee (AFSC) sponsored a community called Penn-Craft, which housed a community of unemployed coal miners in western Pennsylvania.

In 1938, St. Francis Xavier University in Nova Scotia sponsored a self-help housing cooperative for coal miners. This is the first self-help project known to have used preconstruction training techniques. By 1967, there were 2,000 self-help units in Nova Scotia.

Between 1949 and 1969, the Puerto Rico government sponsored self-help housing, building primarily core houses (small, basic units that could be expanded later) and producing 30,000 homes.

In 1950, Flanner House, a mutual self-help project for moderate-income black families without down payment or access to mortgage credit, began in Indianapolis. It produced 360 homes by 1965, and because of its success, ultimately led lenders to make mortgage credit available for minorities in that city.

Also in the 1950s, AFSC and the Friends Neighborhood Guild sponsored a self-help rehabilitation project in Philadelphia. Bob Marshall, later the long-time executive director of Self-Help Enterprises, was involved in that effort.

Most of the early self-help projects in the United States were demonstrations and were not able to keep producing units indefinitely, particularly because they lacked ongoing sources of financing. AFSC began looking for a permanent credit source to accompany self-help housing.

In the early 1960s AFSC's Bard McAllister began working with farmworker families in Goshen, California as part of a farmworker organizing project. In 1961, FmHA Section 502 loan eligibility was extended to nonfarm rural citizens. For those in rural areas, this provided the long-sought permanent source of mortgage financing. In Goshen, under the leadership of Bard McAllister and a successful home builder, Howard Washburn, AFSC began the first Section 502 financed self-help project with farmworkers. FmHA was skeptical and required a completion bond of AFSC, but the project was successful and the die cast.

While homes were under construction in Goshen, Chester Tyson, FmHA State Director in New Jersey, a Quaker and member of AFSC committees, sought to try it in Cumberland County, New Jersey. He assigned Ralph Johnson, who later became a member of the board of directors of NCALL Research, Inc. in Dover, Delaware, to help with planning and with a justification request to the FmHA National Office. In 1963 FmHA was the direct sponsor, in addition to providing mortgage finance, of a six-unit self-help project. Thus, the agency became committed to the process.

AFSC, Howard Washburn and a number of progressive Californians founded Self-Help Enterprises (SHE) in Visalia, California in 1965. Since then SHE has produced more than 5,000 self-help homes.

From 1963 to 1965, a sizeable number of self-help projects emerged that utilized Section 502 financing. By 1965, self-help projects were located in 16 states.[1]

The 1964 Housing Act changed Section 502 to permit land purchase with loan funds. It also increased the size of rural areas eligible for Title V housing assistance (that is, for assistance under the FmHA/RHS housing programs) -- previously open country and places with up to 2,500 persons -- to include places with populations of up to 5,500. These changes spurred interest in self-help housing. California self-help groups played a major role in gaining the amendments.

In December, 1965 AFSC, led by Eleanor Eaton, with the assistance of the Ford Foundation, convened a conference of self-help sponsors in Warrenton, Virginia. Representatives from the United States, Mexico and Nova Scotia participated. Out of this meeting the International Self-Help Housing Association (ISHA) was formed in January, 1966.

A lead player in the formation of ISHA was its first chair, Elizabeth Herring, an early director and board member of NCALL. Between 1965 and 1970, the primary source of administrative funding for self-help sponsors was the federal Office of Economic Opportunities Migrant Division. AFSC secured Ford Foundation funding for ISHA and in 1967, Clay Cochran, a giant among rural housing leaders, became its first paid Executive Director. Cochran came to ISHA through the efforts of Ms. Herring.

A most important publicist for self-help housing was writer Richard Margolis. He chronicled its early efforts and helped create widespread interest. Margolis also served on the board of ISHA and its successor agencies.

In 1969, ISHA broadened its mission beyond self-help and became the Rural Housing Alliance (RHA). RHA became Rural America in 1976. By 1989, the organization's focus had shifted away from housing, and it was renamed the Community Transportation Association of America.

In 1969, the National Rural Housing Coalition (NRHC) was founded to be the lobbying arm of the rural housing movement. Throughout its existence, the Coalition has lobbied for both the self-help and Section 502 programs, and generally has represented the interests of self-help housing before Congress and federal administrations.

During the late 1960s and early 1970s, the California self-help groups and RHA were responsible for incrementally raising the Title V rural eligibility limits to include rural communities with populations of up to 10,000.

[1] No records were available for FmHA self-help loans prior to 1966.

The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 provided two important features for self-help housing:

- Section 523 Self-Help Technical Assistance Grants were authorized, important since administrative funding sources were being stretched or disappearing. The Act also enabled funding for sponsors not limited to assisting migrant farmworkers.

- Section 521 interest subsidy was authorized and implemented as interest credit in 1969. This reduced mortgage interest rates to as low as 1 percent and provided families with still lower incomes with access to the program.

Aided by RHA and NRHC, the Self-Help Directors Association was formed in 1970. It remains an active, and very important, part of the rural housing movement to this day.

The Section 523 Self-Help Technical Assistance Grant Program was implemented in FY 1971. The first grantees were the Rural California Housing Corporation (Sacramento, California), House My People (Pierce County, Washington) and Clackamas County Self-Help Corporation (Clackamas County, Oregon).

The Housing Assistance Council (HAC) was created by the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) in 1971. It initially deferred to RHA on self-help matters, but extended predevelopment loans to sponsoring organizations and maintained staff experience in self-help housing. It remains a national technical assistance and predevelopment loan provider for housing for low-income persons in rural areas.

Between 1971 and 1973, RHA was instrumental in developing a "second wave" of self-help sponsoring organizations. Some of those groups remain active in self-help housing.

In 1973, the Nixon Administration placed a moratorium on housing subsidy with one exception, interest credit for Section 502 self-help loans. Attorneys for RHA and HAC (Lee Reno and Florence Roisman) successfully sued the Administration (Pealo v. Farmers Home Administration) and rural housing subsidy became available again in the same calendar year. It bears noting that urban litigants lost their cases and the rural nonprofit sector was responsible for reestablishing housing subsidy.

In 1979, while Gordon Cavanaugh was FmHA Administrator, the agency succeeded in obtaining amended appropriations language to permit the use of Section 523 grant funds to contract for technical assistance to self-help sponsors. Implementation resulted in stabilization of the program.

Initially there were six contractors who provided technical and management assistance to Section 523 self-help housing organizations. There are now four, serving geographic regions or areas. They are Florida Nonprofit Housing, Little Dixie Community Action Agency, NCALL Research, Inc., and the Rural Community Assistance Corporation.

The current self-help grant regulations were finalized in 1990. The program is more closely regulated than before and includes a requirement that family labor contribute 65 percent of total labor or tasks involved in construction of the homes.

The Section 523 program was permanently authorized in 1992. Prior to that time it was subject to both appropriation and authorization action annually by Congress.

Most families participating in the self-help program finance their homes using the Section 502 direct loans. As a rule, the bulk of Section 502 direct funds are allocated by formula to the states with the balance being held in a national reserve. Beginning in 1992, FmHA provided two of every three dollars for Section 502 self-help loans from a set aside of funds from the national reserve. This action stabilized the program by assuring coordination between the Section 523 grant and the Section 502 loan functions. It helped states, particularly those with small allocations, maintain an orderly program. Self-Help set-aside levels fluctuated until FY 2010, when USDA ceased the practice.

The FY 1995 Clinton Administration budget asked for a subsidy formula change that would have increased the basis for borrower 502 payments from 20 to 30 percent of income for principal, interest, taxes and insurance (PITI). While NRHC and HAC successfully fought the subsidy change, Congress invoked similar cost savings by cutting $600 million from the program level.

Another cost saving measure by the Clinton Administration was the elimination of interest credit for new loans and substitution of a new subsidy mechanism called payment assistance. At that time, payment assistance was based on the applicant/borrower income as a percent of area median and included minimum PITI payment requirements. Substantial savings are realized -- but at the expense of low-income families. In 2006, the formula for payment assistance was modified so that the family pays approximately 24 percent of their income towards PITI.

In May 2007, the agency published a proposed rule for comment introducing significant changes to the self-help program. As a result of the concerns expressed by the self-help community, the agency has been reviewing its proposed changes. In FY 2010, RHS held a series of listening forums with stakeholders. A new rule is anticipated but the timing is uncertain.

RHS has made self-help housing increasingly important. For fiscal years 1997, 1998, and 1999 the Section 523 grant funding was raised to $26 million. It increased to $28 million for FY 2000 and $34 million for FY 2001. Since FY 2002, at least $35 million has been appropriated each year except FY 2010 and FY 2012 when the figure was $30 million. In FY 2011, the appropriation increased to $41 million.

In 1996, Congress created a new program to assist self-help housing nationwide. The Self-Help Homeownership Opportunity Program (SHOP) makes funds available for land acquisition and infrastructure improvement in both urban and rural areas for projects using self-help or volunteers in construction.

Since the inception of the program, over 46,850 units have been funded representing $2.97 billion in Section 502 direct loans. Nearly one-third of the self-help constructed homes are located in California. Other states with active self-help programs include Arizona, Washington, Oklahoma, and Florida which collectively account for 28 percent of all self-help homes since 1966. Wisconsin, Colorado, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Utah comprise over 1,000 loans each representing between 2 percent and 4 percent of the overall activity.

There has been at least one attempt at implementing a self-help program in every state and territory; however some states have not had an active program in more than 10 years. Five states and one US territory show less than 25 units obligated over the history of the program.

Since FY 2000, USDA has obligated 18,353 loans obligated for a total of $19.7 billion. Forty-two states, Puerto Rico, and the West Pacific Islands received funds at least once during this period. Eighteen states (Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Kansas, Maine, Missouri, New Mexico North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, and Washington) had active self-help programs operating for each of the 12 years. These states account for over 80 percent of the units financed. Six states (Delaware, Hawaii, Mississippi, Montana, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin) had active programs for all but one of those years. Eight states had no activity. California consistently has the most self-help activity, however its share of the annual national total declined by about half between 2000 and 2011.

There are presently about 100 RHS self-help grantees located throughout the United States. Some operate multiple projects and maintain more than one grant.

At this writing, self-help housing remains a viable means for low-income families to obtain decent, affordable homes. It embodies the American spirit through the contribution of personal labor for a degree of repayment ability. The skills obtained in the process often lead to economic improvement and work sharing leads to a better sense of community.
